The Preserve

At 14,000 acres, The Richard and Lucile Durrell Edge of Appalachia Preserve System is the largest privately owned and protected natural area in Ohio. Known as "The Edge" to many, the preserve has been owned and operated by Cincinnati Museum Center, with The Ohio Chapter of The Nature Conservancy since 1959. It is a system of natural sanctuaries protecting wooded hills, streams and prairies. Conservation of the preserve's natural treasures and education are among the primary goals of the preserve.

Charles Eulett

Eulett Center is named for Charles Eulett, a naturalist and teacher who spent his life roaming the hills and prairies of what is now known as The Edge. He taught generations of Adams County residents to understand and respect the lands he so loved. As one of southern Ohio's earliest conservationists, he exemplifies the principles that guide the work at the preserve.

The Facility

Eulett Center is a multipurpose meeting, research and education facility overlooking the scenic Ohio Brush Creek Valley in Adams County, Ohio. Located on The Edge of Appalachia Preserve System, Eulett Center is designed to host organized group meetings, regional conferences, training sessions, classes and workshops. A large outside covered deck, a multipurpose room with floor to ceiling windows and the scenic beauty of the preserve make Eulett Center a unique and serene meeting location for nature groups and businesses alike.
